For several hours before the funeral the house was thronged by sorrowing friends who had come to pay mournful tribute to the memory of the deceased. The remains were in the casket, and were partially covered by floral offerings of sorrowing friends of the deceased. At 10:30 o'clock the body was borne to St. Thomas church where a high mass requiem was sung by the pastor, Rev. T. J. Comerford. The large edifice was crowded and the assemblage was among the largest of its kind in the history of the borough. After the service and benediction, the remains were placed in an impressive casket which was filled with consolation for the mourning friends. He said that the upright life of the deceased needed no eulogy for her career had been an open book to those among who she moved. Her life was one of virtue and piety filled with acts of kindness and self-sacrifice. From her early years she followed in a humble way the path that leads to salvation. It is true, he added, that the sorrowing friends intensified the sorrow that would naturally attend her departure, but it is not always the fortune of the just to meet death in the happiest circumstances. The saints and martyrs of the church have departed amidst torture and agony, but there still the consoling thought that when one is prepared to die, it matters little what the manner of death may be. Such was the case with the life just past; she was fortified by the comforts of religion; and she had a sincere and abiding faith that sustained her in her hour of agony. He then paid tribute to the many admirable attributes of the deceased and extended the consolation that the church offers to those who mourn the loss of a loved one. After the service the remains were taken to the Catholic cemetery where they were laid to rest. The pallbearers were: Thomas H. Jordan, of Parsons; William A. Gilmar, John M. Burk, John J. Kearney, M. J. Swift and Edward Craig, of this borough. The floral offerings, which were very beautiful, were carried by F. J. White, J. H.
